BELOVED PIONEER WOMAN TAKEN BY DEATH LAST WEEK

Mrs. J. D. Lynch, 73, Dies At San Jose After Brief Illness

Niles lost one of its most beloved pioneer women last Thursday night, when Mrs. Mary G. Lynch, wife of the late Jeremiah D. Lynch, passed away quietly at the San Jose hospital after a short illness. Mrs. Lynch had been failing in health for the past two years.

Known and loved by many people in Washington township, Mrs. Lynch's death leaves a vacancy that will not be filled. A native of Macroom, Kilmichael, County Cork, Ireland, Mrs. Lynch came to the United State in 1873 with her twin sister and an uncle when she was thirteen years of age. They settled in Indianapolis, where Mrs. Lynch was schooled at a convent. After finishing school in the eastern city, she moved to Denver, Colorado, where she lived until word came of the death of her sister's husband in The Dalles, Oregon. Mrs. Lynch left Denver to live with her sister in the northwestern state, and came from there to Oakland, where she was married to Jeremiah Lynch, whom she had known in Ireland. They came to Niles from Oakland forty-two years ago. Lynch was employed by the Southern Pacific company here.

They immediately bought property here. Mrs. Lynch was one of the most valued supporters of the Catholic church in Niles, and active for many years in the social life of the town. She was a member of the Woodcraft and of several church organizations over a period of years.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. J. E. Smith (Marguerite Lynch) a brother, John Gleeson, of Benecia, and three sisters; Mrs. C. Lynch, of San Jose; Mrs. D. M. Harrington, of Denver and Mrs. Annie Harrington, of Cork, Ireland.

Funeral services, which were attended by many bay region people, were Saturday at the St. Joseph's cathedral in San Jose, where a requiem high mass was said. She was laid to rest in the Holy Cross cemetery at San Mateo.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron D. Thaxter, of Berkeley, visited briefly with Niles friends Sunday evening. The Thaxters were returning from a vacation at Carmel.

The talk will deal with conditions in Europe, particularly Germany, where Jacobson spent some time in a careful study of the trends and meaning of Hitlerism. It is said that no member of the club will want to miss this informative and vivid address.

Under the able direction of Frank O. Bristol, well known to all of the club members as an outstanding master of ceremonies, there will be an additional program of music. The talent is exceptionally fine. Payne Thebaut, will present his "singing strings", something novel in musical entertainment. 1934 MATRONS AND PATRONS OF O.E.S. ATTEND RECEPTION

Orient Chapter Heads Guests Of Honor Tuesday Night

More than 100 people, from all bay cities, gathered at a reception for the 1934 Matrons and Patrons of the East Bay district of the Order of the Eastern Star, at the Masonic hall in Centerville Tuesday evening. Guests of honor were Mrs. Evangeline Muller and J. C. Wasley, worthy matron and patron of the Orient Chapter.

Following remarks by grand officers and visitors, an original program, written by J. C. Wasley, depicted the history of California by the several eras. Presented in pantomine, the following scenes were played: The Spanish period, the Mexican era, the coming of the padres, the advent of the Americans, the golden days of '49, with the miners and the Chinese. During the program, Charles Sorensen, of Hayward, sang sketches appropriate to each scene. Two Spanish dancers, from San Francisco, added a realistic touch to the Spanish skits.

After the dinner the assemblage enjoyed dancing in the dining room to old time music played by Fred Mitte's Haywire orchestra.

Mrs. Evangeline Muller and J. C. Wasley, worthy matron and patron, who were honored during the affair, received beautiful gifts from their officers.

The hall was cleverly decorated with miniature eucalyptus trees and red geraniums in white pots.

Mrs. J. E. Kimber, of Niles, is reported to be ill at her home here.

Robert Miller, alias Peter Glum, was shot to death in the attempt by William Belkey, cafe owner.

Bennetsen, a local dairy worker is said to have entered the cafe shortly before Miller appeared The two had been seen together shortly before the holdup.

Bennetsen confessed his part in the plot to police after the attempted holdup, and was arraigned before Judge J. A. Silva, at Niles on July 27.

He will begin his prison term this week.

ATTACK FATAL TO PICNICKER AT MISSION

Although two San Jose firemen operated a resuscitator for three hours in an attempt to revive him, Ralph Downer , 35, Oakland, salesman, died of acute indigestion at a picnic held at Linda Vista park in Mission San Jose Sunday afternoon. The picnic was being held by the Westland Commercial Travelers' Association.

Downer was playing baseball at the time of the attack and collapsed. A call was immediately sent to San Jose for the pulmotor. The two firemen responded, and with the aid of a doctor worked on the body for three hours. It is believed that Downer was dead before the device was brought into action.

According to John Lowman, of the Chapel of Palms, under whose direction the funeral was held from the Chapel of Chimes yesterday: Downer is survived by his wife Mrs. Cyetta Downer, of 3127 Telegraph avenue, Oakland. Downer was employed by the Ansell-Robinson company, of San Francisco.

In addition to the usual geographic description, the speaker went deeply into the history, social, cultural and political, of the island people. He touched on numerous unfamiliar phases.

Previous to his address, Dr. Crosby was presented with a boutonniere of flowers from his old home garden by little Miss Rebecca Jean Robinson, granddaughter of Mrs. F. Roble.

Eighty guests and members enjoyed the program.

STATE NOT TO TAKE STREET CLEANING JOB

Definite Word Received This Week By Niles Civic Group

PROBLEM UNSOLVED

Chamber Investigating the Possibilities Of Local Action

Definite word to the effect that the cleaning of Nile's First street would not be assumed by the state division of highways was received by the Niles Chamber of Commerce this week in a letter from John H. Skags, district engineer of the highway department.

Declaring that the section of highway through the town could only receive the attention and periodic cleaning given to rural stretches throughout the state, the engineer terminated the hopes of the local civic group for state aid in the problem. The letter indicated that the duty of keeping the street clean had devolved upon the town and that the latter must work out some method of its own.

Faced squarely with the problem, the Chamber is making a survey of possibilities. Although not confirmed, word has been circulated that the cleaning may be carried on as in the past by Pat Murphy, and a small subscription taken up quarterly to defray the expense. The plan, if it comes to pass, will work in with the regular county work in the side and back streets, which are not part of the state system. A committee, consisting of three chamber members, R. Blacow, E. A. Ellsworth and W. B. Kirk, was appointed to study the problem.

Dr. E. C. Grau, head of the Boy Scouts advisory board, told the group that the Scout committee had been appointed and that the selection of a scoutmaster would be made before the end of the week. E. E. Glassbrook, under whose direction the Scout Fund canvass will be carried on, stated that his committee will begin active work immediately when the new Niles troop gets under way.

Important at the meeting was the announcement of the Firemen's dance made by Clarence Crane, assistant chief, who asked that his department be given the support of the town. Chamber president Jones echoed Crane's statements in a plea for the firemen. The dance will be held at the Garden of Allah on the evening of October 20.

The possibility of improving the Niles canyon road was again brought up, and a committee will be appointed to investigate the question.

Beasley, scout field executive, to settle details of the troop rehabitilitation. He will select his own assistants, with the sanction of the scout committee.

Crane, who had previously been appointed to the scout committee will be replaced in that capacity by Frank Nunes. Other members of the committee are: Tony Alves, Paul Donovan, Harvey Braun, Frank Ferry and O. W. Ebright.

Eighty-three years of age, Norris was a native of Iowa. He came to California with his parents when he was three years old. He had been a member of the Masonic order for 62 years and was a past grand master of the Centerville Masonic lodge.

P-T.A. Enlists Children In Annual Membership Drive

The annual Parent-Teachers' Association membership drive, an October feature of the organization work each year, is under way this week directed by Mrs. Georgia Burr, membership chairman.

According to Mrs. Roland Bendel, the children of the school have been enlisted as association representatives to bring in new members. For each membership secured, the child responsible is given the honor of pasting a "leaf" on the membership "tree" at the regular meeting next Tuesday afternoon.

The leaf-pasting ceremony, to which the new members are invited, will end with a party for the children. There will be refreshments. Special prizes will be awarded to those pupils who have secured five or more new members.

The subject, "Why one should be a member of the P.-T. A." will be discussed by a speaker on Tuesday afternoon following the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Myrick left Niles early this week for a two-week's vacation. They are traveling by train, and will stop at Chicago, see the World's Fair, then proceed to New York.

Arthur M. Free To Speak On Agricultural Crisis

Arthur M. Free, tariff authority, will speak to Washington township produce and fruit growers next Wednesday evening at the Washington Union high school auditorium on the factors threatening California agriculture through Reciprocal tariff Treaty with Cuba.

Growers and authorities familiar with tariff subjects and the margin of value between national and foreign produce, are apprehensive of results of the new treaty, which is looked upon as detrimental to cotton, cattle and wheat producing areas in this county. It is explained by Free that our products, speaking in terms of dollars, cannot compete with the foreign goods.

Free will speak under the auspices of the National Farmers' Union, an organization active in the interests of California farmers in both domestic and tariff problems.

The meeting will be of extreme interest to all Washington township producers, in that their product, no matter what, will be discussed. Statistics of Cuban agriculture show, it is said, duplication of almost every crop grown in this area and in the state as a whole. All fresh vegetables, fruits, beans, peas, nuts, and dried fruits, which constitute major crops here, face a depreciation through the treaty. It is explained that the margin of favor is with the Cuban produce by virtue of the cheaper production, which in turn arises from a cheaper and lower standard of living. To effectively compete with the Cuban goods, California standards of labor and wages must be lowered. In this lies the peril to domestic agriculture.

Free will tell local growers what means to follow to protect their crops. The meet will be of vital interest to all, and attendance is urged. The date is October 10, at the Centerville high school auditorium.

CHICKEN THIEVES RAID HEN COOP SATURDAY

Niles chicken coops and the gas tanks of automobiles parked on First street have fallen prey to marauders recently, according to word from local police this week.

Constable O. W. Ebright stated that word had come to him Monday that gas had been syphoned from several cars parked near the theatre late last week.

Chicken thieves, striking Saturday night in the town, took ten hens from a coop on the Charles Guerazzi place on Second street. The theft was reported and police are following several clues.

"WELL how do you like that leg?" asked Dr. Jeff Barnes.

"It's a fine leg for the shape it's in," admitted Gay Nelson dryly, twisting the member delicately and moving the numb toes slowly as the heavy bandages dropped off. "Now," she demanded gravely, "how much longer?"

"It will be a month before you can leave the hospital," Doctor Barnes announced firmly.

"Oh, darn!" Gay exclaimed in petulant disappointment.

Doctor Barnes was distinguished for his success in bone surgery, his good looks, and his unshakable belief in "a reason for everything."

He noted the flicker of pain in her lifted eyes as he added:

"I know you are weary of the hospital and of—us all."

He tried to make the "us" very impersonal, and failing, added quietly:

"But you will not be lame. Not even a limp! I promise."

Gay managed a white smile.

"That's great! Heavens knows a newspaper woman needs good legs."

"I presume the waiting will be the worst part of the cure. For one of your nervous temperament. Tediously exhausting. . . ."

There was a great fascination about this Gay Nelson, the doctor reasoned as he departed. She was like fleeting sunshine on a winter day.

Fleeting! That was the word and it stung him with a sudden cruel realization. In four weeks she would leave Trinity hospital and he'd never see her again. Neither would he ever be able to forget her.

* * *

"I'd like to take you out to your first dinner," he ventured one evening as the last week of her stay waned into 48 hours. As silence greeted his invitation he urged, "Just to celebrate our joint production. You have helped immeasurably in your recovery. I'm proud of your case of bone surgery."

"Who said I'd be hungry?" she groaned dourly. "The way I feel now I never want to even look at food. When I do, I can pay for my own. And I never dine out with married men unless they want to be interviewed."

Gay's eyes were clear blue ice, as she gathered strength at his teasing smile and went on:

"After what you've seen and heard you'd hardly expect me to sit and listen patiently to another man's story of a wife who could not understand him. You'll live through the experience without identifying scars, if all your patients are like me, Doctor Barnes. You'll live to learn, too," with a deep chuckle, "that your wife understands you—even better than you suspect.

"I guessed all this," she said with a quiet conviction, "when I noticed how your suits and ties matched your hair and eyes. No one but a woman who loved you, would have thought of that."

"But you did notice," he laughed softly in triumph, his eyes lighting in combat.

"Noticing is my job," she retorted. Then she turned on him hotly.

"Men know only two types of women—the drudge and the butterfly. The drudge they accept and endure. The butterfly they pity and protect. Take it from me, the butterfly has all the luck. Nothing is expected of her, and," a flash of thin expressive fingers, "she puts out exactly that—nothing!"

"But can't you see or won't you acknowledge," the man continued, honestly convinced of his cause, "that it's so confounded repressing having your life routined to hours? Even your amusements to schedule. It makes a man rebel, turn outlaw, from very resentment to rule."

"And then that man tries to express that freedom with—some some other woman," laughed Gay dryly.

"Oh, I can't expect you to understand," he returned heatedly. "You've had humanity burned out of you. Why you'd even be afraid to take a flyer in happiness."

"Yes," she answered calmly.

Doctor Barnes rose indignantly.

He could have sworn afterward that he saw two tears on the pale mocking face just in the violet shadows of her eyes.

* * *

He hurried back to the hospital next morning, sick from that fleeting obsession that had haunted him all night.

"But," said the nurse with a puzzled look at his inquiry, "I thought, of course, you knew, Doctor Barnes. Miss Nelson left yesterday at noon."

Doctor Barnes answered firmly, hastily, "Oh, I see."

In the hospital office he found a note from Gay. A signed check was enclosed ready for him to write in the amount of his fee. Something between a sob and a curse burst from his lips as he read her farewell dig. A dig that pierced his stupid bachelor's heart:

"Jeff:

"Your egotism will of course demand some explanation for my flight without an address. The answer is quite simple. A clever man would have known.

"GAY."

Honey Production

Treasure for Two

UNDER some scrub pines, the cowboy and the sheriff sat. Quietly. Companionably.

The cowboy fanned himself with his sombrero, then finally wiped his face with a bandana whose color seemed to give the mercury fresh impetus. "Gosh, ain't it hot!"

"I'll say. Le's go swimmin'."

"Later, maybe . . . afterwards."

"Afterwards?" The sheriff seemed a bit slow on the uptake, due perhaps to the heat, perhaps to a recent surfeit of blueberry pie. The sheriff loved good things to eat, and in consequence his shining badge rode on the topmost curve of a series which made up his stomach.

"Sure. Afterwards. You know after we check up on the map and decide about things."

"Oh, yeah," the sheriff knew now; and knowing, forgot about the second helping of pie, forgot even a few degrees of the sultry August heat. "Gee, yes . . . You got the map?"

"I should say so. Right here, boy," slapping a greasy pocket; then, with a careful glance up at the overhanging branches and down the railroad tracks to the far horizon, bringing from the same pocket a worn scrap of paper.

Together they pored over it, eyes and hands twitching with eagerness.

"You see the mark—kind of a dagger, like? That's where the stuff's buried. You follow this trail," a grimy forefinger showed the way, "through Devil Man's Hollow, past Skeleton Rocks, 'til you come to a pine 'thout branches, shaped like a cross. They hung a feller there once. . . ."

A cold wind blew through the August heat. "Gee," said the sheriff, "what'd he do?"

"He was after the gold, too. That's why they hung him. But they did other things to him first." The long look which passed between them was too heavy with terror for the comfort of words. "So you can see how careful we got to be."

"S'pose they should get after us?" A sheriff's badge is evidently no guarantee as to the stoutness of heart beneath it.

"Let 'em!" The cowboy patted both pockets suggestively. "They dont' call me Two-Gun Riley for nothin'!

The cowboy's face became gravely calculating. "Now we're goin' to need money for this, Bill. There's things to be bought—grub an' tools an' such. We'll pool what we got and then I better take charge of it. You know what happened last time, when you had the money."

The sheriff looked doubtful; but his slower wits were no match for the other's keen gray eyes. Besides, a certain crimson memory brought his cheeks almost to the boiling point. He turned his pockets inside out and put their specie yield into the cowboy's hand.

"Okay . . . And it's settled that when we get to Spaniards' Rest, we pick our spots, and the one that finds the chest first, keeps it? The other one has to help him bring it back, but he can't claim nothin'!"

"That's what we said."

"Then there's just one more thing, Bill."

"What is it?" asked Bill, in a carefully toneless voice which promised nothing.

"Why, about Milly. You know that the guy who gets the gold oughtta get the girl. It'd be just like Milly to stick by the man that loses—she's that way. But you and me know that wimmen need clothes and jewels 'n' things. So I think we ought to protect Milly from herself; fix it up so the one who finds the treasure gets Milly, and the other one fades outta the picture."

"Mmm," said the sheriff, "but suppose I get it? Would you be willin' to clear out and leave me Milly?"

"Sure!" the other assured him, with a large, free gesture which indicated how far he was prepared to go. "You bet I will. Why, Bill, I won't never see Milly again, if you get the treasure."

But the stress which he put on the last words overreached itself. The sheriff was pricked to suspicion.

"Yeah!" he sneered. "if I get the treasure. And prob'ly you got it fixed some way so there's no chance o' my gettin' it. I know you, Jim Riley. You're too darned smart. I ain't gonna promise nothin'."

"All right," said the cowboy, "all right for you. Billy Thomas. The expedition's off. I was lettin' you in on this because you was my pal—but you ain't any more. I'll just go alone and have all the treasure."

In a single decisive move the cowboy returned the map to his pocket and fastened the flap. Then he took a sucker from another pocket and applied his tongue to its gummy brown surface.

The sheriff began to cry. "I'm sick of this game," he wailed. "I want my penny back and my head aches and—"

"Aw, be your age," the other sneered at him. "Ain't you most nine? Well, here's your penny then, crybaby! Now scram!"

Clutching his penny, the sheriff scrammed. . . . Should you have stayed to shoot it out with Two-Gun Riley, almost eleven and known as a desperate hombre?

The Modern Slant

By ELLANOR HARRIS

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

JOYCE peeped hurriedly into boxes and drawers in a last minute search for things she might have overlooked in her packing; important little things, accessories upon which hung the individuality or charm of many of her frocks.

Her mind was not wholly upon herself, she was thinking of the costume ball to be held that night at the Country club, wishing she had waited to name her going-away day until after the date for the ball had been announced. Not that she cared anything about the dance. It was Jim.

She tried not to wonder whom he would take, with whom he would dance most and sit out dances. Of course he would do these things. They had both agreed that they would go on doing the things they had been doing. Go on living their own lives right up to their wedding day. They both had had a modern slant on things, were both above petty jealousies; and the friendships they had made were not to be broken just because they were to be married.

The gently stirring breeze wafted sounds of laughter up to her. Her friends were gathering on the lawn to see her off. Hurrying below she stood beside Jim on the long shadowy veranda, looking irresistible in her cool white linen ensemble.

Her eyes fell upon Betty's new maroon roadster, and Betty, herself, waving a hand at her. Behind Betey's car was Anita's green coupe. Anita on the running board, her shining taffy colored curls blowing in the breeze. Joyce eyed them askance. Betty and Anita were both in love with Jim, or so it had been hinted to her.

She looked at Jim, followed the direction of his gaze. There stood Helen. Once he had been engaged to Helen. It was rumored that a silly quarrel had terminated that romance. Such a trifling thing should have made no difference to people in love, which, of course, they were. Jim had never mentioned Helen's name. But he wouldn't. He rarely ever spoke of people.

Joyce felt dizzy. She had never before realized how many beautiful girls there were in Hampton, and Jim, the most desirable young man in their set still unmarried. She had often wondered which of the lovely creatures would have finally won him, had she not happened to come there.

"Time's up! Only fifteen minutes left to make your train," came the voice of her father from the baggage laden car parked at the gate. Jim caught her hand and they raced down the walk and crowded into the front seat with him. As they sped along, Joyce thought of a trip to come. A trip in Jim's car, with old shoes tied on behind and rice showered over everything. Or would there be such a trip coming if she went away on a long visit now? She was not certain she wanted to make this extended visit. Her happy anticipation at the thought of it was gone.

With affected cheerfulness she settled herself into her compartment, while Jim and her father stowed away her luggage and piled magazines and candy within easy reach. As she kissed them goodby, she choked down the lump in her throat. Would Jim be taken home in her father's car? If not, which of the cars would take him home, or perhaps somewhere else—and where?

At the next station, a perturbed young woman in a cool white linen ensemble left the train, and summoned a taxi to take her to Hampton. There she smuggled herself into her father's house, and that night she attended the ball at the Country club, a bewitching Spanish dancer in a ravishing costume, a stranger whom no one seemed to recognize.

Jim, in his courtly Louis XVI dress, was completely captivated by the fascinating stranger, cut in on her dances again and again, sat out dances with her. Whispers behind fans and soft white hands became a part of the atmosphere. The romance of it was glarorous!

Came the moment to unmask and Jim hovered over her eagerly, for she was trying to escape him. His hand fell lightly upon her arm.

"Don't be shy," he whispered softly in her ear. "Hurry and take that disfiguring thing from your face. You know I'm dying to look at you. You dream dancer from Fairyland! I know you are beautiful, you goddess girl. I knew you were my dream girl the moment that I laid my eyes on you."

Joyce felt as if a piece of ice had suddenly been wedged into her heart. So this was her man with a modern slant on things! Her man who was free to go his own gait until their wedding day! The light of life seemed to flicker and die out. Joyce was crushed.

Again he was whispering in her ear. "Please hurry. I can't wait another second. I haven't seen your face since I put you on a north-bound train this morning."

She snatched the mask from her face, her body tremulous with joy.

"Oh, Jim!" It was all she could say.

Slow Growth for Long Life

Greeks' Harp

The Greek mathematician Pythagoras invented an instrument with a single string stretched across a bridge over a four-cornered resonance box, and the Greeks' harp developed from this. It was followed by the psaltery and the dulcimer, the latter played with hammers and damped with cloth or wool. Five of seven strings were used for one tone. Later came the bridge, strengthening the bass tones.

Industrial Education

In a broad sense industrial education refers to the whole range of education from manual training in the elementary schools to professional technical education of university grade. Bluebird Sings in Winter

Although it is a matter of common knowledge that most of our migratory song birds do very little singing during the winter time which they spend in the South, the bluebird seems to be an exception among them. The song of these birds has frequently been noted in the winter in southern Mississippi and at other southern points.

Cause of Rabies

Rabies is a specific communicable disease which affects all warm-blooded animals, including man. Dogs are especially susceptible and, because of their tendency to roam, are the chief disseminators of the disease. Rabies is caused by the virus of poison transmitted by a bite from an affected animal, the poison being in the saliva.

Gypsy Moth From France

Why Lockjaw Develops

Injuries from explosives favor development of lockjaw, because the germ grows only in the absence of air, and injuries from explosives are apt to form lacerated wounds with deep airless pockets.

MOTHER OF SEVEN DIES AT NEWARK LAST FRIDAY

Mrs. Incarnacion Molina, 38, widowed mother of seven small children, passed away at her Newark home Friday after a short illness. She succumbed to double pneumonia.

She had been a resident of the Newark area for sixteen years, having come there from Mexico.

The children, parentless, will live for a time with their grandmother. They will later be sent to some charitable institution, it is said.

Funeral services were held from the home to the Holy Ghost cemetery Monday under the direction of the Chapel of Palms.

SCOUT DRIVE FUND IN CENTERVILLE MEETS SUCCESS

With several organizations already over the top with a one hundred per cent subscription, the Centerville Boy Scout fund drive will swing into the second week Monday with with all indications that the quota will be attained this time, according to Tom Solva, "captain."

All contacts have been made, Silva declared this week, and community response has been spontaneous and gratifying. The drive in the Washington township district is under the direction of Dr. G. S. Holman.

Among the Centerville units to boast of a full quota to date is the Washington Union high school faculty, whose contributions topped the mark early this week.

HUSKERS PUMMEL MENLO FRIDAY 12 TO 0

Displaying an early season form that bids fair to carry them to another championship, the Washington Huskers broke their flashy half back, Muniz, into the clear twice last Friday, to beat Menlo 12 to 0.

Centering their attack around the fleet performance of their star half, the Huskers crossed the final stripe twice in the first quarter. The first tally came early, after Louis Manuel, heads-up center, recovered a fumble deep in Menlo territory. On the next play Muniz ghosted over on a wide sweep around end. The second touchdown came after a sustained drive which ended with a reverse around right end that again sprang Muniz into the clear. Frank Mederios, generally infallible with his conversions, was a little below form, and neither point split the uprights. Last year the Menlo aggregation took the local boys to a tune of 7 to 0, and Jess Regli is pleased with his charges.

Al Muniz is showing stuff this year that will soon have the big time coachs casting an eye in his direction. He packed the ball 24 times for a total gain of 98 yards, and averaged 52 yards per kick. The Huskers gained a total of 159 yards from scrimmage and passes to Menlo's 114.

Amaral, Dinsmor, Mederios, Manuel, Phippen and Sinclair played steady ball.

The Huskers meet Santa Clara there tomorrow afternoon.

Numerous Niles people attended the funeral of Mrs. J. D. Lynch, prominent Niles woman, in San Mateo Friday.

"DELTA PYTHON" MYTH, SAYS SID SNOW, HUNTER

The delta region "Python," reported by two men to be slithering about in the vicinity of Antioch and Brentwood failed to materialize for Sid Snow, formerly of Centerville, when he staked his big game hunting reputation in an effort to capture the reported monster.

After a lengthy search of a ten-mile area in the delta region, Snow concluded that the alleged reptile was a myth. He stated that a creature the size of a robust python would have left many visible trails, and these he did not encounter.

Snow, a famed big game hunter, became interested in the reported reptile when tales of its whereabouts came from a number of sources. Two San Francisco naturalists, evidently more gullible than Snow, are maintaining a vigilance in the delta region.

EMPLOYEES LEARN OF EVENING CLASSES

The value of adult education classes at the Washington night high school, and the availability of instruction was made known to 1200 working men in Washington township last week when a number of industrial plants here informed their employees of the school work and classes. A schedule of hours was attached to each man's time card or handed to him as he arrived at the plant for work.

Principal Olson stated this week that interest in the school work is mounting, and that word of the classes is being broadcast. He stated that the new chemistry class, started recently, has an enrollment of twelve. A limitation of laboratory equipment will necessitate closing the enrollment soon.

Student Council Sets Game Admission Price

Members of the student council at the Washington Union high school met last week to study the question of admission to football games scheduled for the home field this fall. It was decided that adult outsiders and alumni will be charged twenty-five cents.

Enrollment At High Reaches 466 Last Week

DECOTO FIREMEN FIGHT BLAZE AT PLANT

Said to have been started accidentally by an acetylene torch at about 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, a woodpile blaze gave the Decoto firemen a tussle at the Willet and Burr plant, at Decoto.

According to Chief Roland Bendel, the blaze in itself was not particularly serious, but quantities of valuable material were endangered. The department made connections with the plant water system, and extinguished the fire in short order.

The Willet and Burr plant suffered serious losses last year when the main machine shop was destroyed by flames.

At a meeting of the Armistice Day celebration committee held at Hayward, Wednesday, September 26, Commander Frank J. Thomas, of Decoto, head of the local unit of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, was elected chairman.

It was decided by the committee to have all fraternal organizations and service clubs in south county towns participate in the parade, which will feature an old-time vehicle division. Any vehicle made before the war may be entered. The parade is on November 12, at Hayward.

A valuable addition to the Veterans' collection of war and patriotic relics has been obtained by Thomas. It is a faded and torn American flag, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Yarrington, of the Masonic Home. The history of the relic is being looked up.

French Short on Giants; Big Men in Other Lands

Giants have been known in England and Holland more than in any other countries, although they have come from every country. France is short on giants—doctors think it is because the French do not eat much meat, notes a writer in the Kansas City Times. There was a French immigrant, however, reported in 1920, who was 8 feet 6 inches, weighed 368 pounds, and was reported to eat 24 eggs for breakfast. It was not asserted that he did it every morning or that he paid for them himself.

Great Britain tells great tales of giants and of those enormously obese. The emperor Frederick the Great had a guard whose name is lost—he was 8 feet 3 inches. The New York Tribune tells us (1897) of two wonderful giants who came out of Ireland to London in the middle of the Eighteenth century, where their charm was worth solid money. Charles Byrne was 8 feet 8 inches, and enormously strong. He died at twenty-two, and was followed by Patrick Colter, whose vitals had gone to len'th but not stren'th, and who walked slowly, resting his hands on the shoulders of two stalwarts who kept with him to hold him up. Colter was the terror of lamplighters; he lifted the tops off the street lamps to light his pipe at the flame within.

Origin of Croquet

Croquet, which was one of the most popular games as early as 75 years ago and which is still played in many sections of the country, has its origin in an old French pastime called "paille maille." It originated in southern France in the Thirteenth century and was introduced into England. During the reign of the Stuarts paille maille became very popular. Later the game was modernized in France into croquet as known for the past three-quarters of a century. England quickly took up the revised game and shortly after that it became a popular pastime in America.

WALNUT RULING TO EFFECT SALES AT ROADSIDE

Amended rules of this year's walnut game were released recently by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and are sufficiently tight to cover every factor in the deal without being too difficult or unreasonable for enforcement. It is politic for all walnut growers of Washington township, whether they have two trees or a thousand to acquaint themselves with the code.

Among the rulings of the revised code are the following, which will effect small growers are the following:

The retail sale of ungraded "orchard run"is prohibited. This will forbid roadside sales, unless graded nuts are offered.

All walnuts offered for retail sale must be grade for size and must measure up to the 90 per cent kernel soundness required by the code.

Gold Mines

MISS BARTLEY shook her head so violently that each one of the seven plumes on her new picture hat stood at a different angle. The effect was grotesque, little as she dreamed it. Her thought was how wonderfully attractive it would appear in village eyes. Certainly it could not be copied by home milliners who aforetime had tried her soul.

Worst among those offenders was Dolly Arnold—through the paradox that more than once she had come to the very edge of success. Dolly, a school teacher, was vacation-bound to be the pattern of primness to her pupils. Instead she inclined them by precept and example to trail after styles they could not possibly hope to approach.

The wealthy Miss Bartley had elected herself social leader of Oaktown—and so far she had got away with it. Almost in the cradle she had developed a crush upon all her belongings, and, especially, her figure—it was so statuesque. A fine tailor, given carte blanche, might have made the epithet descriptive. At the hands of a passionate mail-order catalogue addict, the result can be pictured only by a fluent imagination.

This fall the catalogues had, according to Jess Tyree, the village oracle, "done thar d—dest, just when they ought not." There was, you see, a drive on—for a trifle of a million endowment for the X Y Z university, which had an Oaktowner for president. Bright and early Monday, greatness, of men and causes, wouldd flood the town. A bishop, freshly widowed, headed the list, two senators supported him, flanked by congressmen and judges galore.

Hence the flutterings of the dove cotes. Oaktown was, to put it mildly, shy at least a dozen eligibles.

Oaktown made holiday gayly—put on its best looks, clothes, mood. The great in procession passed up and down and athwart its limits, smiling, saluting, swapping merry banter with the natives. Sarah Bartley had elected to meet them at the train.

And Dolly was to sing on the great occasion—not alone but leading Elves' chorus of ten small green-clad girls she had been training in strict privacy for a month. Billy Gardner had made that possible—his big empty house had given fine space. After listening once or twice he had smiled, nodded, and said off-handedly to Dolly: "We'll have a float, all leaves and flowers and things—surprise the crowd with it just as the bishop finishes—after they're done some one shall say those golden voices are samples of our native ores—wanting to work the mine is why we need capital—"

At earliest dawn of the great day Oaktown began to stir and thrill. Things went like clockwork. The parade formed and filled magically, and got under way without a single hitch. Sarah Bartley in the forefront, had never felt finer—nor looked worse. She thought the bishop at her side was impressed.

He was—but not exactly as she would have chosen him to be. Maybe she took his breath, else maybe the cat got his tongue. He spoke something flurriedly less than twenty minutes instead of the hour everybody had come to hear. Then in waltzed a string band specially ordered by Billy Gardner—and to its last sweet strains there rolled majestically in front of the stand what seemed a magic miniature forest, with elves perched here and there, showing now a head, now a dimpled hand, now the dancing flicker of a small lovely foot. Then as a hidden somebody drew a long lovely chord from a fine old fiddle, there came music such as Oaktown had never before heard. Dolly, ambushed in thick greenery, sang her very best—high golden notes that accented the young chanting. Not long drawn out—twelve minutes at the most. Then came Ned Woodruff to take the crowd by storm—in the midst of which the bishop held up a silencing hand as he rose to say: "A wholly new experience, my friends! Who before us has listened to elfin music, led by the voice of an angel?"

After that things had to go with a rush—there was hardly a bit of use for organized enthusiasm—money came galumphing, popping, pouring in on every hand. Everybody caught the spirit of giving.

Dolly stood palpitant—pulled into the limelight against her will. Sarah Bartley had called out with a high trill, "A thousand more right here! Anybody want to top it?"

"I do!" from Gardner, turning to face the bishop as he spoke. "Will ten thousand tempt you to marry me right off the reel? Been waiting a long time to have a bishop handy—"

"With all my heart!" cried the bishop; "the bride—where is she?"

"Also waiting—I picked her out the day she was born," Gardner said superbly. "But I dared not tell her so until all things were ready—"

"Ah!" said the bishop with his most benevolent intonation; "I understand. Let the good work go forward."

Did you ever stop to think?

By Edson R. Waite

Money spent at home helps you and your city. Money spent away from home helps some other city. This habit of sending away to distant points for printing that you can get at home is becoming too common. I quote an editorial from the Penang Gazette and Straits Chronicle, which should be read carefully by every businessman. The editor says:

"We have received an interesting little booklet issued by Messrs. Mansfield & Company, Ltd. The booklet is a mine of information and gives details not only for traveling to and from Europe but of local leave and extended holiday trips which can be made by vessels of companies for which the firm act as agents. We were particularly glad to note in the foreword the following mention of Penang:

"'The firm of Mansfield & Co., Ltd., was founded in Singapore in 1868, with branches in Sandakan and Penang. Although the Sandakan branch is no longer in existence, that at Penang continues to grow in importance.'

"And just one word of complaint. Why was it considered necessary to send to Europe for the production of the booklet? It is a neat affair, but there is nothing in it beyond the ability of Malayan firms to produce.

"'Spend in Malaya First' would be a good motto for those of us who earn our daily bread in this country."

M. N. Crane and H. Hibner left this morning on a fishing trip to Antioch.

Mr. and Mrs. William Curley are vacationing at Monterey this week.

Asiatic Governments

The principal governments of Asia are China, republic; India, British dominion, governed by native princes; Japan, empire; Manchukuo, republic, under Japanese protectorate; Siam, kingdom; Russia, in Asia, Soviet; Persia, kingdom, governed by Shah; Afghanistan, kingdom; Arabia, kingdom; Rhutan, kingdom; Tibet, governed by Grand Lama; Turkey, republic, under dictator; Iraq, kingdom.

Drouths in South Africa

Drouths in South Africa are more severe in their effects than formerly because of changes brought about in the character of the land by soil erosion, the effects of which are often mistaken for those of a deteriorating climate. The vegetative cover has been destroyed, particularly by sheep, and the rain falling on the bare soil is no longer retained, but flows off rapidly into gullies and streams.

The Welsh

The Welsh are, in the main, the modern representatives of an ancient Celtic people which occupied the southern part of Britain. These sought the remoter regions of the island when the invaders came. They are far from being an unmixed stock, however. The name Welsh is akin to that of an old tribe of Gaul. It entered the Germanic tongues with the meaning of "foreign."

"Jazz" and Music

Jazz is ragtime "music" in discordant tones played on various instruments. Music is the art or science of the pleasing or harmonious expression or combinations of sound tones; harmony or melody. There is a difference between jazz and music.

PRUNE CODE UNDER FIRE BY GROUP OF GROWERS

A number of Washington township prune growers, joining with the objectors to the AAA marketing agreement for their product, attended a meeting at Gilroy Friday night to discuss revision of the code, which they hold detrimental to their industry.

Insisting that the prune agreement was drawn up without a proper study, and that its tenets are not to the best advantage of the industry, the dissenting group adopted a resolution asking for its immediate termination. Other resolutions adopted demanded that there be a re-survey of tonnage, and reduction of the official tonnage from 195,000 to 150,000 tons. A redrafting of the agreement was asked at the meet, to provide payment to growers on the basis of cost plus a fair return.

Among speakers was Mrs. W. A. Sloan, of Irvington, secretary of the Washington Township local of the Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union.

While militant and active in their objection to the code, the group has not as yet obtained the support of the majority of growers, many of whom have expressed satisfaction with the agreement as it stands.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the right dose of a properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It gently helps the average person's constipated bowels until nature restores their regularity.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store, ready for use.
